INTERGENERATIONAL ISSUES IN CHINESE MIGRANT FAMILIES

Dr Wendy Li
College of Healthcare Sciences
James Cook University

The 49th APS Annual Conference: Psychology meeting society’s challenges
Hobart, Australia, 30 September-3 October 2014
Filial piety is a Confucian concept which refers to the traditions of respect, reverence, care, obedience, and fulfilling duties to one’s parents and grandparents (Li, 2013).

Six detentions of filial piety
- Living arrangements
- Support to parents
- Respecting parents
- Ancestral worship
- Gender norms
- Children’s achievements
My wife cooks for us every day. A bad phrase from our daughter can ruin our day. For example, after a meal, she said, “The meal’s not good, too salty.” Both my wife and I were very unhappy. It seemed what we had done was worthless. (A 66 yr old man)
When I told my parents that I had gambled and lost everything, they were heartbroken. My father called me an unfilial child because I “lost” my family’s “face”. My relatives and friends all blamed me for being an unfilial child. (A 26 yr old male student)
My parents had implanted their dreams in my mind since I was a little boy. Studying overseas was their dream. They expected me to live their dream. They therefore sent me here to make their dream come true. Fulfilling my parents' wishes was my obligation as a filial child. (A 29 yr old male student)
Filial piety in the key concept that governs intergenerational relationships.

Filial piety emphasise the collective relationship among family members.

While filial piety remains an important value for Chinese people, it has evolved in the contexts of immigration.